What do you want to publish?

When it's time to publish your research, the library has multiple services depending on what you want to publish. Here we have collected all services and in the entries below you will find the most common ones.

If you do not know where to start, we recommend the entry Strategic publishing where you get an overview of various advice on scientific publishing. In the left-hand column you can also immerse yourself in bibliometry, open access, copyright and how to register in DiVA.

Dissertations

For those who want to print your dissertation or want to digitize an old dissertation.

Peer reviewed material

For those who want to publish open access, peer reviewed material with Stockholm University Press.

Other publications

For those who want to publish internally reviewed material and want help with print and distribution.

Research data

For those who want to save and/or publish research datan, and learn more about the available alternatives.

At the beginning of [...]sh researchers started a sociological study o[...] in Stockholm in 1953, Project Metropolitan. This [...] e project's at times dramatic history, where issues of personal integrity and the role of social sciences were heavily debated. These discussions were fueled by the rapid and far-reaching digitalization in society at large and also within social sciences. As such, Project Metropolitan came to symbolize the benefits and potential risks related to an expanding body of research based on large groups of individuals and multiple register data sources.

At the outset, the project's founders sought to answer the following
